FAR EAST

1. Indian Ambassador attempting to influence Japanese policy:

25X1A

Japan's Foreign Minister Okazaki has informed Ambassador Murphy that the Indian Ambassador to Tokyo, K. K. Chettur, on three recent occasions has tried to influence Japanese policy by intimating that Japan should be consulted regarding UN action in Korea such as the Yalu raid.

Chettur suggested that Japan should indicate its disapproval of methods now being pursued on the theory that Peiping would be alienated and peace prospects reduced.

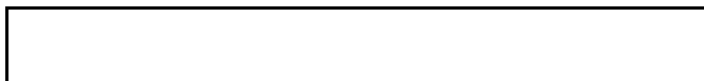

Comment: Chettur, a strong advocate of India's neutrality, has openly criticized American Far Eastern policy. He is supporting neutralist elements in Japan, and is believed to have been instrumental in influencing Nehru against India's participation in the Japanese Peace Treaty Conference at San Francisco.

3. Plan for major Viet Minh offensive reported:

25X1

25X1A

[redacted] the Viet Minh has prepared a military plan for a coordinated attack by all units to penetrate the French defense perimeter north and south of Hanoi (see map on following page). According to this plan, which covers the period from July through October, two Viet Minh divisions will attack against the northwestern sector of the perimeter, followed by another divisional attack in the area east of Hanoi. In the southern sector of the delta, a fourth division will create a diversion.

25X1

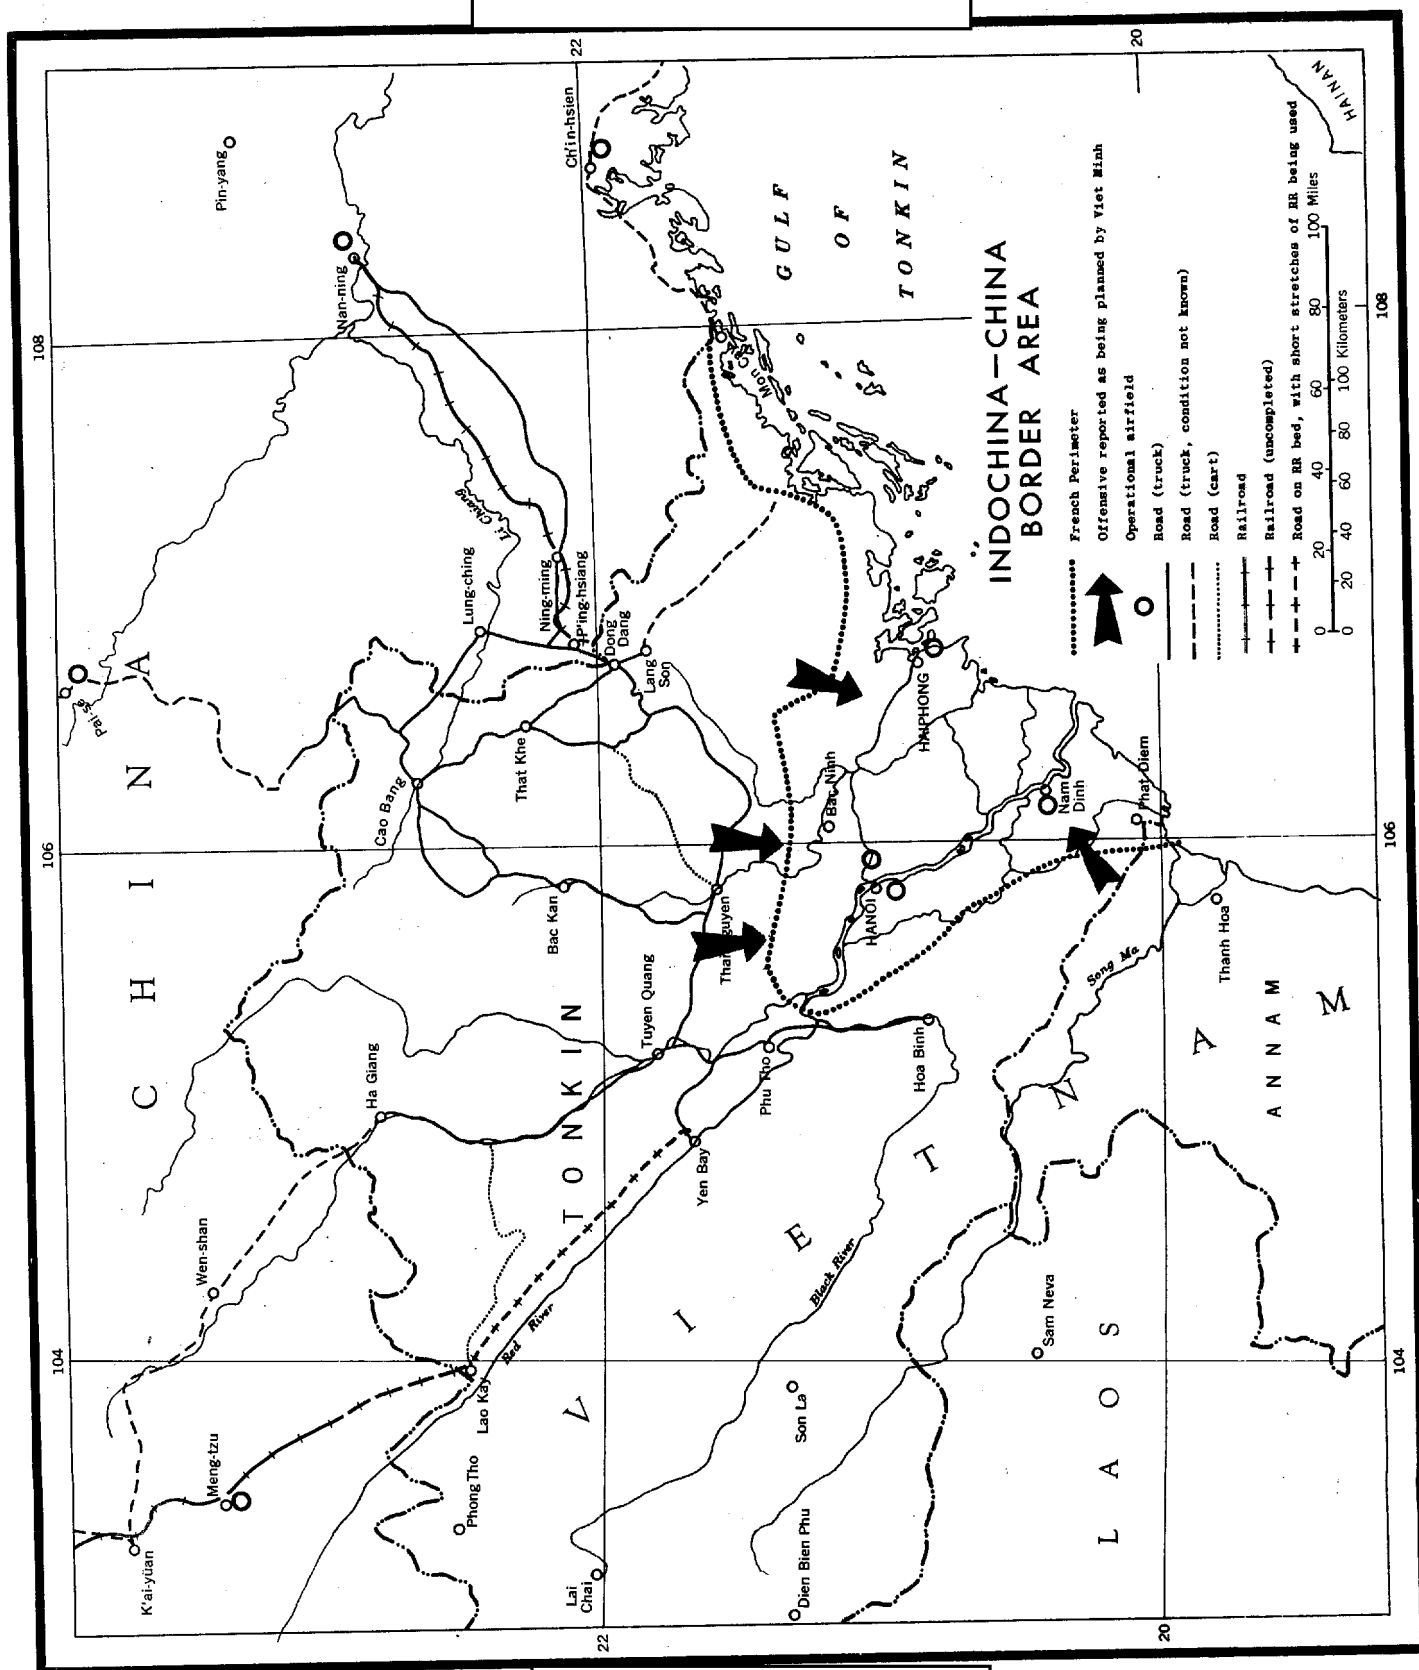

[redacted] the primary aims of the operation are to collect rice from the "last" harvest and to increase Viet Minh control in the delta area.

25X1

Most reports indicate that the Viet Minh, currently engaged in training activities and the stockpiling of supplies, does not intend to mount a major offensive until the beginning of the dry season in October.

7. Comment on East German "reforms":

Implementation of the administrative "reforms," announced at the Socialist Unity Party conference last week, would continue the trend toward tighter controls and concentration of authority in East Germany which began with the government reorganization announced in May. The "reforms" may reflect dissatisfaction with previous performance, but probably also anticipate the introduction of additional measures likely to be unpopular. These might include still tighter border controls, party and administrative purges, further curtailment of "bourgeois" political activity, and ultimately the complete satellization of East Germany.

The failure to announce measures for the immediate formation of a national army suggests either that initial steps will be taken sub rosa or that the East Germans will await the lead of the Bonn government.

The possibility that a decision to embark on full-scale rearmament has not yet been reached is supported by the continued emphasis on the necessity of obstructing West German adherence to the European Defense Community while preparing an East German "socialist" base from which the "vassal Bonn government" can be upset.
